

NZ natives are low-care too!

Most people want low maintenance gardens, with sub-tropical plants and palms being the most popular choice. While Angelique Lambermon of The Aesthetic Landscape Company loves the sub-tropical garden, she also loves to inform people that her company specialises in creating low maintenance gardens using New Zealand natives.

“Low maintenance native gardens, like sub-tropicals, also feature lots of colour, variety and varying textures, and natives are, of course, most ideally suited to our climate,” says Angelique.

Below: Angelique and her niece, Danielle in the shade house.

With nearly 20 years in the business, plus a horticultural diploma and a Bachelor of Landscape Architecture degree, Angelique has developed a team of focused girls with the experience and passion to create beautiful and successful gardens.

After just one hour’s consultation clients receive a tangible, practical starting point, which depending on the brief, may include a list of suitable plants, where to place them, and how to look after them; or a quick sketch that can develop later with further appointments into a developed plan including installation and maintenance.

“Whether the garden is a pocket-sized city courtyard, as seen here in the photograph, a rural lifestyle block, or a large country estate, we point people in the right direction,” says Angelique.

“We take more time and much pride in achieving the end result. To make visualisation easier for our clients, we can photograph existing gardens and overlay them with visuals, and produce easy-to-read CAD drawings and plans to assist those needing resource consents and council approval for any planned work.”

So if your outdoor spaces were sadly lacking this summer, call Aesthetic Landscape Design. You’ll discover a committed and delightful team who can assist in the selection, design and installation of your dream garden space.

“We offer free quotes for landscaping work that doesn’t require measuring, and it helps enormously if clients have decided on a budget.”

Call Angelique today. And check out the website – it’s full of useful information and pointers.

Aesthetic Landscape Company – where aesthetics are as important as plants, detail and design

