I thought that I would never see...

This week the local art fairies, otherwise known as Corrine Bayraktaroglu, left, and Nancy Mellon, were caught adding to their knitted art project on the Knit-Knot Tree in front of the Emporium. The women invite others to add knitting to the tree, on which art surprises will be hung at this Friday's Fling in the Springs, to take place downtown from 6 to 9 p.m. Participants may find other art surprises downtown on Friday night, which they are encouraged to take home.

Censorship of one-act playsparks debate over rights

Senior Peter Keahey set out this year to write a one-act play that was funny, compelling and critical of today's world. What he got instead was controversy in the village regarding the responsibility of school administrators to censor a school-sponsored function and students' right to freedom of expression.

Part one in a two-part series— Students choose to return to Antioch

When she was choosing a school from her home in France, Jeanne Kay fell in love with Antioch. While most liberal arts colleges sounded the same in the student guide she consulted, Antioch stood out as more "genuine." Kay joined almost all of last semester's Antioch College students in returning to campus this winter, despite the college's current uncertainties.
